

Working to deadline

'I'm up against a deadline', is a remark used often by journalists whose work is useless, or 'dead', if it is late and the edition is missed. The phrase comes from the American Civil War. A line was marked all round the fence of the Andersonville POW camp and any prisoner seen to cross it was shot dead without warning