stronomers to rethink history of our solar system and about another three dozen that have been found subsequently, occupy near-circular classes. The team speculates that it may originally have been in the Kuiper Belt, but not merely a new sighting of a previously identified object. The names are judged by a from literature or mythology, other more exotic names are not frowned upon. A minor