

Iridium tests global phone service

Following 11 years of research, development and implementation, Iridium – the first worldwide mobile communications service – has been introduced free of charge to a limited number of customers in order to undergo final testing and fine-tune the system. Iridium is a network of 66 low-Earth-orbit satellites which allow users to make phone calls or receive pages anywhere in the world

