

Web snooping case

In a major test of Internet privacy Google has resisted a demand for customer information the Bush administration says will show that filters don't keep kids away from on-line porn. The government will now review just 10,000 websites and 1,000 search queries – down from an original request for a million sites and billions of queries

Share of searches (Nov 2005)

