

Thunderstorms affecting space weather

Scientists have been surprised to discover that thunderstorms in the lower atmosphere change the weather on the edge of space. These high-altitude disturbances disrupt radio and other communications, and better forecasts could now lead to more reliable GPS and short-wave radio transmissions

