

Expanding waistlines point to Europe's unhealthy future

Half of all adults living in Europe are currently overweight, and the number is set to expand by the end of the decade, further increasing health costs and hindering economic development

