

Arctic ice melting faster than expected

Global warming could melt almost all of the Arctic ice in the summer months by the year 2040, according to a study published by the U.S. National Centre for Atmospheric Research. The September rate of sea ice decline is now approximately 8.6% per decade, or 60,421 sq km per year

