

New Gitmo trials could include 9/11 suspects

President Obama's decision to resume military trials for detainees at Guantanamo Bay will open the door for the prosecution of several suspected 9/11 conspirators. Out of 172 prisoners still at the U.S. facility in Cuba, about 80 are expected to face military trial

"HIGH-VALUE" DETAINEES

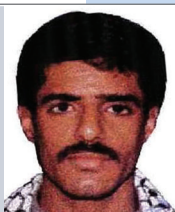

Khalid Sheikh Mohammed

Alleged mastermind of 9/11 attacks. Captured in 2003, held at Guantanamo since 2006. Plans to try him in civil court derailed by political and public opposition. Case against him remains unclear

Ali Abdul Aziz Ali

Nephew of Khalid Sheikh Mohammed is alleged to have transferred money to 9/11 hijackers for flight training and expenses

Walid bin Attash

Charged with selecting and helping to train hijackers. Also alleged to have been involved in 1998 U.S. Embassy bombings in Africa

Mustafa al-Hawsawi

Saudi national is accused of being Al Qaeda paymaster, transferring money to hijackers and arranging for their travel to U.S.

Ramzi Binalshibh

Believed to be chief intermediary between 9/11 hijackers and Al Qaeda leaders. Slated to be "20th hijacker" but failed to obtain U.S. visa

Abdul Rahim al-Nashiri

Alleged mastermind of 2000 USS Cole bombing. His trial is likely to be first to proceed under Obama's new directive

Ahmed Ghailani

Found guilty in 2010 of conspiracy in U.S. Embassy bombings but cleared of other charges. Verdict seen as setback for Obama's civil trials