

UK gets go-ahead on new nuclear plants

Britain's chief nuclear inspector has approved UK government plans to construct new nuclear power stations, despite the crisis at Japan's Fukushima plant. Twelve new reactors are proposed at seven locations by 2025, with the first due to come on line by 2018

About 18 percent of UK energy is currently provided by 19 nuclear reactors operating at nine locations

