

Syrian dissidents pressing for oil sanctions

Syrian activists are stepping up calls for international sanctions against the oil industry to deprive the regime of a crucial source of revenue amid mounting repression of popular protests. Oil revenue has become increasingly important with tourism decimated by months of unrest

