

Electronic “skin” can monitor heart

An ultra-thin electronic device that attaches to the skin like a stick-on tattoo can measure electrical activity of the heart, brain waves, and other vital signs without the bulky electrodes used in current monitoring

