

Today in History

November 27, 2014

▲ Australian Test cricketer Phillip Hughes, 25, died two days after he was hit by a ball during a domestic match in Sydney. The ball struck his neck below his helmet

1807: The partition of Portugal forced the royal family to relocate to Brazil

1893: A general election in New Zealand was the first in the world in which women were allowed to vote

1895: Alfred Nobel specified that his fortune should fund prizes for those who had “conferred the greatest benefit on mankind” in physics, chemistry, medicine, literature, and peace

2005: The first partial human face transplant was carried out in France