

El Chapo under extreme watch

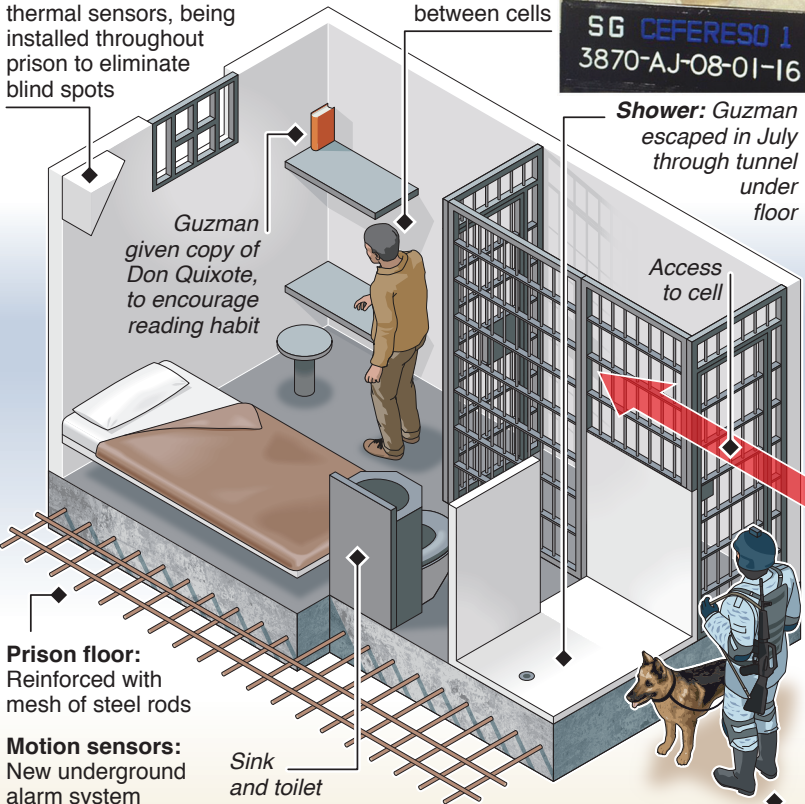

Increased security measures are being taken to ensure Joaquin "El Chapo" Guzman does not break out from the Altiplano high-security prison from which he escaped last year

Cameras: Around 1,000 new security cameras, as well as thermal sensors, being installed throughout prison to eliminate blind spots

Cell: Guzman to be moved at random between cells

Shower: Guzman escaped in July through tunnel under floor

Prison floor:
Reinforced with mesh of steel rods

Motion sensors:
New underground alarm system installed

Visitor access:
Severely restricted.
Those allowed face stringent screening

Sink and toilet

Surveillance: Elite guards wearing helmet-mounted cameras and accompanied by dogs trained to detect Guzman's scent, keep watch 24 hours on his door

Dogs also taste Guzman's food to prevent anyone from poisoning him
