

Heightened security for Euro 2016

Following the Paris attacks last November, France is ramping up security for the Euro 2016 tournament, deploying thousands of security officials for matches and at "fan zones" across the country

- Venues: 2.5 million people due to attend matches. Up to 8 million expected at "fan zones" in host cities
- Team camps for 24 teams

Local police units armed with new German HK G36 assault rifles

STADIUM SECURITY

First perimeter: Extends 1km from stadium. Body search and confiscation of bags larger than 25 x 25cm

Second perimeter: Tickets electronically scanned. Further body search if necessary

NO-FLY ZONES

● Anti-drone technology deployed to take control of any drone violating no-fly zones enforced over all stadiums and training grounds

● Authorities reportedly training for possibility of drones being used to disperse chemical or biological weapons over crowds

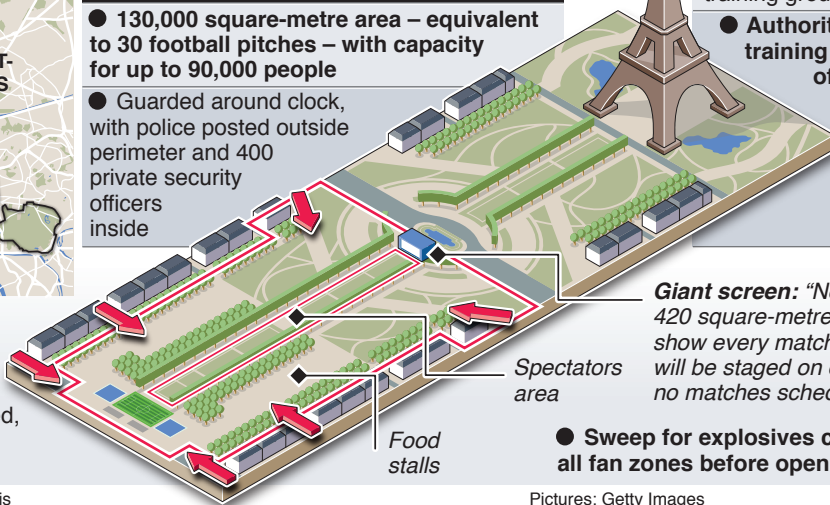

Stade de France:
1,200 security officials

PARIS FAN ZONE

● 130,000 square-metre area – equivalent to 30 football pitches – with capacity for up to 90,000 people

● Guarded around clock, with police posted outside perimeter and 400 private security officers inside

Eiffel Tower

Giant screen: "New dimension" 420 square-metre screen will show every match. Concerts will be staged on days when no matches scheduled

● Sweep for explosives carried out at all fan zones before opening each day

Champs de Mars:
Paris "Fan Zone"

➔ Entrances:
Metal detectors installed, systematic pat-downs, CCTV and sniffer dogs