

Today in History

June 28, 1995

▲ The state of Madhya Pradesh in central India was designated a “tiger state” to protect the threatened animal from poachers and settlers

1919: The Treaty of Versailles was signed between Germany and the Allied Powers, officially ending WW1

1967: Worshippers were permitted to return to the Wailing Wall in Jerusalem after the Six-Day War

1992: U.S. surgeons transplanted a baboon’s liver into a human being

1995: Nelson Mandela ordered an investigation into human rights abuses during South Africa’s apartheid era