

Today in History

January 21, 2017

▲ Millions of protesters joined the Women's March on Washington and in other cities around the world following Donald Trump's inauguration as U.S. President

1793: Louis XVI was beheaded on the guillotine after being overthrown in the French Revolution and tried for treason

2003: The hispanic population became the largest minority in the U.S., overtaking the black population

2008: Global stock markets plunged as fears grew of a U.S. recession amid the subprime mortgage financial crisis

2016: Women in Brazil were warned to avoid pregnancy for fear of birth defects caused by the Zika virus