

U.S. hate groups down, but hate still up

The number of active hate groups in the U.S. declined for a second straight year in 2020, but levels of hate remained as extremists moved to online networks, according to the Southern Poverty Law Centre (SPLC)

NUMBER OF HATE GROUPS IN U.S.*

1,018: Spike after election of Barack Obama, first black U.S. president

■ Total ■ White nationalist

1,020: Reaches all-time high under President Donald Trump

Department of Homeland Security has warned that U.S. could face heightened threat of domestic extremist violence from people angry at Trump's election defeat and inspired by storming of Capitol building on Jan 6
