

North Korea blows up border roads

North Korea has blown up parts of two major roads connected to the southern part of the peninsula, after Pyongyang warned it would take steps to cut cross-border transport links

Pyongyang: Alleged South Korean drone flights over capital prompted North to issue warning

 Roads blown up on northern side of border

Symbolic destruction of disused roads that once linked two countries sends message that North Korea is not prepared to negotiate with South, experts say

